It all started with a group of fun-loving friends who wanted to drink great Pinot Noir every day. Ben Papapietro and Bruce Perry met over 35 years ago while working together at the San Francisco Newspaper Agency. Along with being native San Franciscans, they discovered a common passion for great wine and food, with a special interest in Burgundian wines. This led to many wonderful family dinners and talk of winemaking. Following the inspiration of their grandfathers, Bruce joined Ben in his garage, where he had begun making wine a few years earlier.

During their ensuing years as garagistas, additional inspiration came from their co-worker Burt Williams. Burt was making Pinot Noir and eventually started Williams Seylem Winery with his friend, Ed Selyem. Burt invited Ben and Bruce to watch (and sometimes help) them make their wine, giving Ben and Bruce an excellent opportunity to learn from a master about making excellent Pinot Noir.

It quickly became clear that the two had quite a talent for making great wine. It wasn't long before they were purchasing their own Pinot Noir grapes and making more and more wine. With great encouragement from family and friends, Bruce convinced Ben that the time was right to introduce their own label, Papapietro Perry.

In 1998, Ben and Bruce embarked upon starting a winery in Healdsburg. The winery soon became a family affair with Renae Perry handling the operations and Yolanda Papapietro handling distributor relations. Over time, they added Chardonnay, Rosé and Zinfandel to the lineup.

They have kept production small in order to keep quality high. This commitment to quality has garnered them 90+ scores and accolades from top national and international critics. They still enjoy making wine and sitting down together over a great meal and great wine. Happily, some things never change.
